Dear Ryan Comingdeer:

Thank you for taking the time to review my résumé. My passion for front-end development has sustained me through both tedious and exhilarating projects, and my experience has made it possible to maintain a high level of code excellence. That's just part of why I think I would be an ideal addition to your team.

I have over five years of experience as a developer, and also as a designer, working extensively with a web development team crafting tools to assist American vintners to connect with the American wine culture. Working heavily in a Ruby on Rails environment, I handled all aspects of front-end development, periodically dipping deeper into the realm of back-end development and often out into the world of visual design.

Never beat down by a complicated scenario, I love working with my team toward developing clean, easy-to-read, and fun code (Can code be fun? Of course!). I'm used to working in the gap where the marketing team clashes with the back-end developers over feature development versus code written the right way. In the end everybody wins. Where I come from, I don't just work on one product at a time, but maintain concurrent thought-tracks, each with it's own level of engagement or complexity.

Let's talk more about how I can help you keep your clients satisfied and your work fun. Find me via email at daniel.e.greenlaw@gmail.com or via telephone at 509.540.9062.

Sincerely,

Daniel Greenlaw
